

whether particulate matter in the atmosphere causes cooling or heating. Thus Bryson's views are untenable even on his home ground.

Even the New York Times, trying to give some semblance of objectivity to its scare-tactic article, had to admit that: "Specialists in the Department of Agriculture...believe that weather is a random variable, obeying no regular cyclic pattern over the years except, of course, the seasons...The more likely pattern for any year...is one in which some areas of the world have good weather for crops while other areas do not...Others in the department also argue that modern agricultural technology and irrigation are capable of mitigating the effects of drought in the U.S."

Bryson: Nazi Scientist

Bryson's Climate-Food project at Wisconsin does research into the relationship between climate and food production under the guidance of the Interdepartmental Committee for Atmospheric Sciences (ICAS) in Washington, D.C. An interagency body, ICAS has extensive responsibilities in weather modification which include programs for the National Science Foundation and the Departments of Defense and Agriculture. Bryson has applied to the National Science Foundation for a $4.8 million contract for the next five years, and he submitted a proposal earlier this year to the Department of Defense's Advanced Research Projects Agency for funds.

Bryson, the dust-gatherer whom Fortune magazine hails as a "bold forecaster," is in reality a Nazi scientist, serving the needs of future fascist planning. Identifying and mapping new regions for looting and possible short-term weather-modification, Bryson's work dovetails with Rockefeller's slave labor redevelopment plans. For example, the new rainfall patterns "predicted" by Bryson would cause such regions as the Northern Sahara and the Iranian plateau to "prosper" — both key areas in Rockefeller's investment plans.

According to the University of Wisconsin's Daily Cardinal July 26, "Bryson ensures that his results will be used by personally briefing government officials." As the economy plummets, the choice will become starkly clear for the working class: Accept the phony results of Rockefeller-promoted pseudo-scientists like Bryson or organize with the Labor Committees for expanded production and the brute-force development of nuclear fusion power.

Sadat: Make War, Not Bankruptcies

Aug. 27 (IPS) — Egyptian President Anwar el Sadat revealed yesterday the actual reason for last October's Middle East war. Nothing military or ideological — it was merely the simplest way for near-bankrupt Egypt to get hold of some much-needed cash.

A leading West German paper, the Frankfurter Rundschau, reported on Sadat's revelations today. The Egyptian president, speaking before a student audience in Cairo, said, "If we had not gone to war, it is possible that we would not have been able to provide our people with their daily bread this year." He noted that six days before the beginning of the war he went before his national security council to point out that, in view of the country's catastrophic economic situation, there was only one way out: war against Israel.

The Rundschau remarks that Sadat was right, for the war certainly paid off. It brought Egypt something like $50 million in aid from Arab and certain non-Arab countries. Further, the war's outcome has "improved" the domestic political situation in Egypt and, in the Rundschau's words, "now its economy is beginning to bloom."

It seems that the World Bank, U.S. foreign aid conduits, and other Rockefeller financial institutions eschewed handouts to a broke and desperate Egypt in order to encourage this interesting form of self-help.
