Stopping the Carter comeback

EIR can claim some credit for the demise of the Carter administration back in the elections of 1980. From the moment the abomination known as Jimmy Carter's presidency was installed in 1977, we exposed it as the tool of the international oligarchy, operating through the Trilateral Commission, to destroy every nation-state in pursuit of the goal of massively cutting the world's population.

These hideously immoral policies were summed up in the administration's final policy-document, the Global 2000 Report, which recommended measures to reduce world population by 1 billion before the year 2000.

But, even though President Reagan personally abhors the neo-Malthusian philosophy of Global 2000, George Shultz's State Department and the Donald Reagan-James Baker III Treasury have gone right ahead to implement the economic and monetary policies that are making Global 2000's recommendations come true.

Now, taking advantage of the crumbling of the economy under the mythical Reagan "recovery," the old Carter crowd is trying to steer minorities and students into a mass fascist movement which will actually back International Monetary Fund genocide in Africa, disguised as "humanitarian aid."

Nor is it surprising to find the United Nations in this dirty business, since the U.N. bureaucracy, together with the Swiss-based Red Cross/Red Crescent, currently controls all "relief" programs into the drought, famine and disease stricken areas, and is using this power to herd Africans into concentration camps, where they will all die faster.

Carter's former U.N. ambassador, Andrew Young, now mayor of Atlanta, Georgia, is taking a point position in organizing for African genocide. Young happens to be a board member of the U.N. Office of Emergency Aid for Africa, of which the executive director is Maurice Strong, one of the world's top advocates of population reduction in the Third World.

On March 27, Young's office intervened, helped by the Coca-Cola Corporation and followers of Hitler-admirer Louis Farrakhan, to try to shut down a forum being given at Morris Brown College in Atlanta, by former Guyana Foreign Minister Frederick Wills. Wills's speech was then given under virtual siege conditions. He detailed how IMF loan "conditions" are deliberately being used to kill millions in Africa.

The Young apparatus busied itself spreading wild slanders on campuses, accusing the Schiller Institute, on whose behalf Dr. Wills was speaking, of being a "Nazi" institution.

Why Andy Young and the Carter backers at Coca-Cola kicked up such a ruckus to block the Schiller Institute message from reaching students became very clear on April 17, when Young sponsored a conference at Atlanta University under the title, "World Hunger: Local Responses." Under the pretext of discussing "food relief in Africa," Young's office joined with the United Nations-linked Society for International Development, the University of Georgia, the Southern Center for International Studies, and Atlanta University to persuade students to accept the systematic murder of millions of Africans.

Speaker after speaker, mostly from the academic world, unfolded the theme that genocide should surely be carried out—but Carter-style, under some more acceptable name, such as, "profound social transformations," borrowed from Maoist China. One professor had the gall to suggest that Africa should have to "go through the same process" as did Western Europe three centuries ago, in the Thirty Years' War.

Only the most vile racist could put forward the idea that today, when advances in science and technology hold out the hope of conquering disease and hunger, and colonizing outer space, some part of mankind should be forced to "go through the same process" as one of history's greatest calamities.

Here are two short steps to exorcise the Carter comeback. First, fire George Shultz and sweep all sympathizers of Global 2000 neo-Malthusian genocide out of the State Department and Treasury. Next, convene the "Indira Gandhi Memorial Summit" of industrialized and developing-nation leaders, to replace the IMF with a new world monetary system. Developing Africa with the most advanced technologies must be the highest agenda item for that summit.
