

There is really no valid reason why the Eskimos should be made or encouraged to continue as hunters or trappers in the Arctic, especially if they don't want to. . . . The more employment that is found for Eskimos other than hunters and trappers, the better. I think it is useless to talk of them resuming the native way of life."

But, Canada being Canada, if an order, or even a wish comes down from the commander-in-chief, Her Royal Highness Elizabeth II, there aren't too many people who will have the moral courage to oppose it, no matter how insane it is.

The sovereignty issue

The deportation coincided with a "worry" of the British vis-à-vis the United States concerning the High Arctic Islands. The report said, "By 1946, the U.S. presence in the north had declined substantially, but within a few years it would increase again. The Cold War led to several large projects in the Arctic, this time involving the High Arctic Islands. First came the joint Arctic weather stations, followed by the radar stations of the distant early warning line. A large number of U.S. vessels were involved in the sea supply of these operations. Over time, Canada's claim to Arctic waters became the predominant concern, and one that remains today."

The report stated: "Mr. Denhez observed that the creation of the Arctic Islands Game Preserve involved the exercise of Canadian [i.e., British] sovereignty and was designed to reinforce Canadian control over the Arctic. The stated purpose of the game preserve was to preserve the game for the benefit of the Canadian Native people. However, there was no aboriginal population in the High Arctic Islands at the time. The question that then arose was the significance of populating the High Arctic Islands with aboriginal people as the logistical consequence of the adoption of such measure. Mr. Denhez asserted that the 1953-55 relocation must be seen against the background of many years of government efforts to assert a Canadian presence in the Arctic and that there were those who saw the relocation in terms of further assertion of Canadian sovereignty." A 1929 Canadian government memorandum was quoted in the report: "The creation of this preserve and its appearance on our maps serves to notify the world that the area between the 60th and 141st meridians right up to the Pole is under Canadian sovereignty."

As shown in EIR's first installment of "The Coming Fall of the House of Windsor," the British monarchy's World Wide Fund for Nature's creation of "wildlife reserves" all over the world is only a pretext for strategic control over specific areas, for the purpose of irregular warfare.

According to the Royal Commission report, "A Dec. 29, 1952 memorandum to J.W. Pickersgill, Clerk of the Privy Council and Secretary of the Cabinet, situates the opening of RCMP posts in the Arctic in the context of a discussion about the importance of maintaining Canadian sovereignty in the Arctic. The memorandum states that 'About a year ago Mr. Pearson (Secretary of State for External Affairs) remarked in private that he wondered how good our claim was to some areas of the Arctic. . . . Probably of much greater concern is the sort of de facto U.S. sovereignty which has caused so much trouble in the last war and which might be exercised again.' "

A spokesman for the Royal Commission told EIR that "there have been hundreds of such rehabilitation projects" over the years, in which a substantial number of human lives were lost. He said that such projects are still going on.

EIR Windsor Special Report 'staggeres' WWF

EIR's Special Report, "The Coming Fall of the House of Windsor" (Oct. 28 issue), which details the role of the British royal family, Prince Philip, and the World Wide Fund for Nature in genocide around the globe, was reported in the British weekly the People on Oct. 30. "Last night the WWF was staggered at the attack on Philip and the charity," it reported. People has 2 million circulation and is read by an average 5.6 million people per week.

"Prince Philip has been branded 'a murderer' over his leadership of the World Wildlife Fund," it said.

"In an astonishing attack by an American pressure group, which supports U.S. President Bill Clinton, the Duke of Edinburgh is accused of 'mass genocide.'

"The self-styled Executive Intelligence Agency [sic] blames the WWF's policies of establishing game reserves for wrecking the African economy and causing people to starve. The 60-page report, published in Washington this weekend, compares Philip with Hitler and brands him a mass murderer who is plotting to stamp out Africa's 'darker complexioned peoples.' The group, which is affiliated to the American Democratic Party, even tries to link Prince Philip with the deaths of hundreds of thousands in Rwanda. . . .
