

or a lesser one on this planet, that nation can not cope efficiently with the kinds of severe problems which are becoming increasingly commonplace around the world today.

In most cases, many of the person's such, axiomatic assumptions of belief are adopted in an arbitrary, irrational way. Often, this irrationalism is cloaked with reference to "tradition." Often, an axiomatic quality of assumption of belief is adopted through the person's susceptibility to such forms of "other-directed" irrationalism as the current vogue in "political correctness," or simply a desire to believe what one would wish one's employer, neighbors, and so on, to hear oneself believing. It is those sorts of arbitrary assumptions of axiomatic belief which govern individual and mass behavior.

It is the sharing of such axiomatic assumptions of belief, whether sound ones, or absurd ones, which are, for better or worse, the foundations of those conspiracies which pervade society at all levels, and which determine virtually all of the important mass-phenomena in history. It is the sly mephistophelean type's witting manipulation of the implications of a targeted victim's axiomatic beliefs, whether through the mass media's daily and weekly manipulation of popular opinion, or otherwise, which accounts for most of the mass lunacy which occurs in today's current history. The typical, silly if dangerous terrorist is usually manipulated into his deed by means of which the terrorist himself is unwitting; he is unwitting, because he believes his action flows from his own autonomous motivation, rather than, as is virtually invariably the case, someone else's manipulation of a stupidity which that terrorist is unwilling to admit is his own stupidity. Similarly, nations often fight wars which should have not occurred, or fail to fight the wars which they should have fought, because of false assumptions of belief.

The only protection one has available, against becoming a victim of such induced sorts of irrational axiomatic belief, is reliance upon reason, and a keen eye to actual history, as distinct from the popularized mythologies often conduited through the textbook, and classroom, apart from ordinary gossip. In the following pages, we rely upon the verifiable facts of history, to explode several of the most dangerous among the axiomatic false assumptions rampant within the U.S. population and policy-shaping institutions today.

EIR versus the Windsors

This issue's Special Report on Great Britain's Pacific warfare against the United States is the latest in a series of in-depth EIR studies of the British monarchy's evil role in world affairs—historically, and to the present day. Other cover stories in the series, prepared under the direction of Lyndon H. LaRouche, Jr., include:

April 15, 1994: "Lord Palmerston's Multicultural Human Zoo," documents the method of Venice, and then London, in manipulating the people of many nations around their petty hatreds and passions.

Oct. 28, 1994: "The Coming Fall of the House of Windsor," an exposé of the role of the British royal family and the World Wide Fund for Nature in genocide around the globe.

Nov. 11, 1994: "Royal Family Uses Indigenism to Cull the Human Flock," describes the Windsors' operations to splinter the nations of the Americas.

Jan. 13, 1995: "Prince Philip Deploys Worldwide Green Terrorism," examines the cases of Greenpeace and Earth First!

Feb. 17, 1995: "Phil Gramm's 'Conservative Revolution in America,'" documents the fascist nature of the British free-trade ideology.

March 24, 1995: "London Sets the Stage for a New Triple Entente," provides a rich historical background to the fight between British oligarchism and the republican forces, leading up to World War I.

March 31, 1995: "Terrorist International at Work: The Chiapas Model."

April 28, 1995: "Prince Philip's 'Indigenist' Plot to Destroy Australia."
