

‘Anti-Imperialists’ for a New Roman Empire

There are three key features to be noted about this emerging fascist force.

First, Lyndon LaRouche has stressed that one should not be misled by the fact that this network is composed primarily of low-life and political throw-aways. They are that; but they are also the man-servants of the international Synarchist apparatus deployed by the financial oligarchy, whose goal is to establish a new, global version of the Roman Empire.

The Madrid network’s stated intent is to establish a Europe-wide fascist bloc. In the words of the Spanish Falange’s university branch, the Sindicato Español Universitario (Spanish University Association), which waxed eloquent about the Falange’s intimate alliance with Italy’s Forza Nuova: “The ties of unity between our two organizations grow ever stronger, and this will surely be the seed for that European Front which will bring social-patriots together against this Europe of traffickers and globalization.”

The program of the groups gathered in Madrid is a radical populist blend of attacks on globalization, the International Monetary Fund (IMF), and “usury” in general; racist diatribes against dark-skinned immigrants who are “flooding our countries, and furthermore smell bad,” as Blas Piñar so delicately puts it; and denunciations of imperialism and the U.S. war in Iraq.

All of this populist rhetoric is woven together with an appeal to return to the so-called “traditional Catholic values” of the feudalism of the Middle Ages—when men accepted their station in life, and before they were corrupted by the Renaissance’s “deification” of man, which dared to promote man’s creative mental powers as that which makes him “made in the living image of God.”

As for empire, the Argentine philosopher Alberto Buela—who is part of the so-called “Catholic nationalist” networks standing behind Breide’s PPR, which networks organized a July 2002 seminar in Córdoba, Argentina, addressed by Buela and the Spanish Falange’s envoy Jorge García-Contell—makes the argument in a most revealing way. In a 2002 article entitled “Eon in Schmitt and De Anquin,” Buela—who is a specialist in Heidegger, Hegel, and Aristotle, three of the Synarchy’s preferred philosophers—favorably quotes the influential Nazi jurist Carl Schmitt, a leading Synarchist figure of the middle 20th Century:

“ ‘Empire, in this context, means the historic force that is

From the Editors

Aug. 5, 2003—Former EIR correspondents and/or contributors Marivilia Carrasco (Mexico), Lorenzo Carrasco and Silvia Palacios (Brazil), Gerardo Terán and Diana Olaya de Terán (Argentina), and Angel Palacios (Guadalajara), are no longer associated with Executive Intelligence Review, or with any of the publications and political organizations associated with Lyndon LaRouche.

These former collaborators of LaRouche broke with him politically and philosophically over the substantive issue of LaRouche’s continuing public exposure, since 1984, of Synarchism, the formal name for universal fascism. The trigger for this break with LaRouche, was LaRouche’s successful public exposure, internationally, of the Synarchist networks behind U.S. Vice President Dick “Yellowcake” Cheney.

It was the same Synarchism associated with Cheney today, which had created the fascist governments of Italy, Germany, Spain, Vichy and Laval France, and others, which had attempted world-conquest under the leadership of Adolf Hitler. These Synarchists, then deployed by Hitler’s Nazi Party through Franco’s Spain, had used their channels through Mexico for a massive Nazi penetration of South America. This Synarchist network, built around an occult freemasonic cabal, continued to operate, with its right and left components, within the Americas even after the Nazis’ defeat, and is presently increasingly active today. It functions, now as then, as a network of fascist organizations in South and Central America still today, organizations with deep ties to fascist organizations presently based in Spain, France, and Italy. Carrasco et al. associated themselves publicly with defense of the same Synarchist tradition, by name, behind the Nazi Party’s massive penetration of Mexico and South American nations during the 1930s and early 1940s.

The anti-fascist LaRouche movement, and this publication, are committed to the policy outlook towards Ibero-America presented by U.S. Presidential candidate Lyndon LaRouche in his 1982 report, Operation Juárez. EIR’s editorial policies are:

- the defense of the sovereign nation-state;
- the physical and political integration of the nations of Ibero-America, toward the construction of a new, just global financial system to replace the bankrupt IMF system;
- the building of infrastructure projects, to bring progress to the region;
- and, above all,
- the concept of man as uniquely endowed by his Creator with the power of creative cognition—a power which the Synarchists are fanatically determined to subvert in favor of a return to medieval, so-called “integrist” or “ultramontane” forms of imperialism.
