The Evil We Fight

It is worth reminding ourselves again, and again, that there is only one source of evil in this world, an all-pervasive evil which threatens to throw all mankind into proverbial Hell, for generations to come. That evil is the British Empire, and it must be destroyed.

It is the British Empire, in its imperial financial form and otherwise, that has worked tirelessly since Franklin Roosevelt's death, to destroy our United States, and to keep us enmeshed in useless wars that will prevent the emergence of any alliance among sovereign nations to destroy that empire. And it is the British Empire that today uses President Barack Obama as a tool in pursuing that same aim—as the unprecedentedly long, unwinnable war in Afghanistan underscores.

Fortunately, through extraordinary efforts by the Administration's National Security Team, along with China and Russia, one of the recent British attempts to detonate a new, devastating war, through conflict on the Korean Peninsula, seems to have been contained. While the British hand has not been public, there is no question but that it is only the British who have a geopolitical interest in exploding this situation—and we will need still beware.

There is another crisis with huge genocidal implications looming in the early part of 2011, however, which has a more direct British hand. That is the upcoming referendum in the nation of Sudan, long a target of the British Empire, which has never forgiven that potential African powerhouse for having evicted its imperial armies, and killed "Chinese Gordon."

In just 20 days, on Jan. 9, the southern portion of Sudan is scheduled to vote in a referendum, on whether it wants to secede from Sudan. Those who favor peace in the region, and in Africa as a whole, have warned repeatedly that conditions are not ripe for this referendum, and that, under current conditions, it is an almost foregone conclusion that the outcome will be renewed war between Khartoum, the capital located in northern Sudan, and the South. The British imperialists, and their puppets, insist—with full knowledge of, if not lust for, that outcome—that the referendum go ahead.

One of those leading British puppets is Susan Rice, Obama's special envoy to the United Nations. Rice has repeatedly insisted on a U.S. policy stance which would lead to a Southern split-off, and war—despite the fact that such a war will most likely spread throughout the region, leading to a genocidal process that will dwarf anything seen in that continent up until now.

The British aim—global depopulation—will be served by such a development, and British puppets like Rice are going along.

Such is the inevitable result of capitulation to the British Empire today, an empire so bankrupt that it only sees the fomenting of global chaos and war as a pathway to its own survival. Some call it the "Samson strategy": Pull down the world on your head, and call it victory.

Our sworn objective, as Americans and human beings, is and must be to defeat this empire, with a positive alternative for mankind's survival. That means protecting nation-states, like Sudan, and creating the conditions for worldwide development with a global Glass-Steagall banking reorganization, and a credit system for development of major infrastructure projects that will uplift all peoples.

LaRouche has put that plan on the table. All we need to do is grab it.
