

LaRouche's Four-Point Program

Politically and economically, the global situation is ripe for the four-point recovery program laid out by Lyndon LaRouche in his May 16 webcast (<http://larouchepac.com/node/30865>) That program includes: 1) reinstate FDR's Glass-Steagall; 2) restore a Hamiltonian credit system, a Treasury-supervised system dedicated to physical-economic growth; 3) smash the Green policy; and 4) move immediately into a mobilization for a thermonuclear fusion-based economy.

Without reorienting political and economic thinking around such an approach, there is no hope for avoiding a further descent into social chaos and mass death, either through a devastating collapse of the means of physical existence, or global war.

Fortunately, the key Eurasian nations—China, Russia, and now India—are already on track. As signified by the recent breakthrough summit between Russian President Vladimir Putin and Chinese President Xi Jinping, these giant nations are united on a perspective of cooperation for high-technology development, including space exploration. The fact that the communiqué pledged joint work on Xi's Economic Silk Road and Putin's Eurasian Economic Community underlines this harmony.

The development perspective outlined by the incoming Narendra Modi government in India, as well as the reception to his election in Russia, China, and the Southeast Asian region generally, gives promise that India, with its impressive scientific capabilities, will be joining in the effort as well.

There is no such positive news to report from continental Europe, of course, but there are significant developments there. The European parliamentary elections held over the May 25 weekend resulted in a political earthquake against the European Union's hated economic dictatorship. Dramatic realignments are now underway, especially in France, where the Socialist Party, with its EU-dictated austerity program, was trounced. Combined with the revolt in Germany, which is echoed elsewhere, against the British-Obama confrontation course with Russia, this anti-EU vote opens up the political process for the necessary change in policy, toward cooperation with Eurasia.

The key, however, lies in the United States, which remains the linchpin of the global economic and political system. If the United States remains under the thumb of the British Empire's policies, through British puppet Barack Obama, global prospects for humanity will remain grim, despite the hopeful moves elsewhere. But if the U.S. political scene itself undergoes an upheaval, with a movement of the huge section of the population which has dropped out of politics due to demoralization, back into the fight, and a revolt against the Obama/Wall Street control over the Democratic Party, the pathway to a positive future is in sight.

The potential for precisely such a development was evident in the recent Senatorial primary in Texas. Although the corrupt Democratic Party machine was able to defeat Kesha Rogers in the official vote total, it cannot squelch the effects of Rogers' bold leadership in reawakening the FDR-JFK spirit in the Democratic Party nationally. Those who were roused by Rogers' message to take action, know that the stakes go well beyond the election. They, as part of a nationwide machine, are inspired to fight on, for the global change required.

The LaRouche four-point program stands at the center of that fight, with the potential to transform not only the nation, but the world.
